conduct of the war. Mr. Daniels coupled with the greatest pleasure. with this presentation a counter charge that Sims himself had opposed and held back execution of the greatest "bold and vigirous" naval project against enemy submarines, the laying of the North Sea mine barrage.

The President laid down his policy in person to officers of the Atlantic fleet, speaking aboard the flagship Pennsylvania in August 1917. He told them he was not satisfied with progress against the submarines being made by the Allies and urged them to abandon prudence and seek an audacious solution to the problem at whatever risk. He added that he was "willing to sacrifice half the navy tireat Eritain and we together have" to creek enemy submarine nests. Do not stop to think of what is pru Cent for a moment, he said. An Unprecedented War.

"This is an unprecedented war and therefore, it is a war in one sense for amateurs. Nobody ever before conducted a war like this, and therefore nobody can pretend to be a professional in a war like this. Here are two great navies, not to speak of the others associated with us—our own and the British—out-numbering by a very great margin the navy to which we are opposed, and yet casting about for a way in which to use our superiority and our strength.

Is Hoover a "Menace"?

THE national conventions at Chicago and San Fran-L ciscó are approaching.

Are the party leaders getting panicky about the Hoover boom?

Are old party ties breaking, over the prospects of having "A Great Business Executive As Chief Executive?"

At any rate the "regulars" are worried. They see the danger of the voters flocking to the man who offers them the prospects of more business and less partisanship.

Is Congress Making Peace-or Political Capital?

Shall a League of Foreign Nations be called in to extricate us from the War from which we do not seem able to extricate ourselves? This would be a national calabity. But if Congress dilly-dallies much longer in its effort to make Political Capital for the coming election such a situation may arise. This interesting tangle is presented in the May issue of CURRENT OPINION.

"I would have gone to College ...but..."

. . "I wanted to get to work

"I thought experience was the best way to learn. Now I know that I could have profited by the experience of others. I should have arrived much sooner if I had had the substantial training that the young men of today can get. Other things being equal, I prefer university-trained men in my business."

> This man has subscribed to the New York University Fund because students at the University get a practical and liberal training. They can even get it after they have gone to work, by taking evening courses.

"I couldn't study the subjects I needed

"How I hated Latin and Greek! I wanted an education, but the only kind I was offered was a classical education. My biggest regret today is that with all my ambitions, I couldn't study the subjects I needed."

> This man has subscribed to the New York University Endowment Fund because students at New York University are not limited to an academic education. They can get training in business and industrial management, as well as in medicine, law and engineering.

. "Frankly, I couldn't afford it

"A college education would have meant a terrible sacrifice to my parents. I wanted to go; they wanted me to go-but I just couldn't afford it. I have paid over and over again for not having been able to go."

> This man who was deprived of an education has subscribed, and subscribed heavily, to the New York University Endowment Fund. At New York University over 50% of the students work during the day and take their courses at night, paying their tuition from their own earnings. This man's gift will help to provide facilities for hundreds of such men who had to be turned away last full.

NEW YORK UNIVERSITY has removed the handicaps that prevented these three men from going to college.

But she labors under the handicap of insufficient endowment to accommodate all who want her training and are qualified for it.

Men who appreciate what a university training would have meant to them will gladly help her remove this handicap, so that New York's young men and women may have the advantages they were compelled to miss.
